Intent to Sole Source

Francis Marion University seeks to sole source the procurement of on-site, three-day training for K-12 and higher education faculty that will provide thorough instruction on project based learning and on the design of effective projects. Training should take place on the campus of the university in Florence, South Carolina.

Current situation: Francis Marion University is seeking a solution for project based learning training. Local school districts in South Carolina, the Center of Excellence for College and Career Readiness, and the faculty at Francis Marion University desire a three-day training program that will cover the theory behind project based learning, the basics of the methodology, and hands-on instruction in designing classroom projects. Participants should be able to create projects during the training, receiving assistance, hands-on practice, and resources to take with them. The successful solution must be in person and on site and must offer both instructive lectures and hands-on opportunities.

Intent to Sole Source: The University has researched other project based learning programs and institutes and finds that the Buck Institute for Education is the only vendor that the University is aware of that can provide a solution.
